XXXIII. Colloquium Biblicum

Image, Image-Making and the Creation of (Un)Likeness

on April 8–10, 2026 in Prague at the Faculty of Protestant Theology of Charles University

The colloquium deals with concepts of image and image-making in the Biblical World and its reception. Despite being the only means to see what others see, as true embodiments of particular ontological properties, images are typically studied under generalising frameworks and schemes. Such approaches assume not only that humans share the same semiotic beliefs but also an ontological constitution. However, while anthropological studies have challenged the idea of a shared ontology between all humans, biblical scholarship has for a long time historicised and nuanced how ancient Levantine peoples have understood their visual artefacts. In this sense, the conference invites scholars to discuss how ancient conception of images, methodological approaches and hermeneutical readings in different theological contexts have helped to forge (un)likeness.

We look forward to meeting you in Prague.
